Historical Sketch of Canada.

Canada, from the Indian word Kanata, signifying a collection of huts, was discovered in 1497 by Sebastian Cabot. A temporary settlement of Europeans was made at St. Croix Harbor, by Jacques Cartier, a French Navigator, who sailed up the St. Lawrence in the year 1544. In 1608 a permanent settlement was made on the present site of Quebec, Canada being then called New France. In 1759, Quebec was taken by General Wolfe, and Canada became a British Province. In 1791, it was divided into Upper and Lower Canada, but reunited in 1840, under the appellation of Canada East and West. At a still later period the organization of the government has been beneficially modified. In all civil affairs, the province is now independent of the imperial government.
